Dear David,

Thanks for your letters of 20th inst. As requested, I am returning the letter from the CAPE ARGUS.

1. Your short letter of 20th. Thanks for sending the replacement. I had already decided to keep the imperfect copy, and have written my name in it. Shall I return it to have it perfected for myself, and then you can charge the replacement to my a/c?
2. Your longer letter of 20th. Personally I don't worry about the serialisation.

I accept your views about the SABC., but Dorrie is going to listen to the review, not me.

3. Further errata.

Page 412, line 3, I think I should have said, 'Bring them in'.

Page 506. It is not certain the bystander was innocent - he was a member of the OB, As it stands, it can do no harm, but it might seem a bit naive.

Page 525. A real slip, missed many times. Line 7, Hoffie should have said, 'How is Peter?' Patrick was the boy's real name. On page 428, I changed it to 'Peter' for the same reason I called his mother, 'Mrs. R.'

Page 525, 13 lines from foot, I do not know how I passed 'It was a light'. It should have read, 'It was the light'.

Page 530, line 2, the word 'of' should have been 'for'.

Page 537, Flag controversy. This is still spelt wrongly.

" " I had already corrected the spelling 'MacCrowe' to 'Macrone', but the compositor must have known better. Probably Macrone won't buy the book now!

Page 543, 'Indian question' under the heading 'Smuts'. It is ironic that a writer who has scoffed at the terms 'Indian question', 'Native question' should get this done to him in the index.

4. There is one last point on which I would like your advice. After writing to you that I meant to put 'evocation' not 'invocation', I am now wondering if 'invocation' would pass with a push. Do you think this is possible? Somehow I don't think so. I think privately I shall blame the OUP for not spotting it.

Although we are not giving out the book to anyone to read, we have shown it to some people and have had many compliments on its handsome appearance.

Best wishes from us both.

Yours ever,
