

12.6.90.

Dear Neville,

A short note about my trip. By the way I was absolutely horrified by the lack of a stamp on the last letter especially as my secretary still believes she sent it by aerogramme as I asked her to. But obviously you do know the difference between the two so what else can I do but apologise profusely. Secondly, I am sorry to say that the list of names which I sent you and which you were so unfairly cavalier about was one I obtained from you on my last delightful visit and I will not have it denigrated this way, even by its author. Anyway, these and other deeper and more delightful issues we can discuss, if you will see me, soon.

My plans are now to arrive in London on June 21st, spend a week there and then see you guys the next weekend. I have a booking to leave for Geneva on June 29th from Heathrow at 12.50pm arriving at 3.20 pm on BA 728. I plan to return to London on July 1, leaving at 7.05 in the evening. However, if by that time we are not totally bored with each other or talked out or if there are useful files I could still look over, the return could be changed, again depending on your blessing.

Hope these are still convenient dates for you. I will call when I get to London to see if this suits you.

I enclose a basic letter and approach I am using on this initial, "pilot" (as the social scientists like to say) part of the project.

Fondest regards,

Magnus.
