Dear Trevor,

Thank you for your letter of April 24th. You may be certain that I shall remember that Ambrose is still alive. I am extremely glad that I do not have to deal with his life as well.

Yes, I knew that the collisions with Geoffrey came in 1955 and 1956. I must make some arrangement for you to see the typescript because, after all, there is a great deal about yourself. I have reached chapter 22 which brings me to Capetown, and the rest of the book should be fairly uncomplicated. Geoffrey's character and personality are well enough established, and the last eight years will really be the story of how he opposed the new rulers of the country.

Give Beyt my love when you see him, and my respects to Colin Winter.

Yours ever
