The Rev. D. B. Harris,
St. Paul's Vicarage,
Wilton Place,
London, S.W.1.

Dear Mr. Harris,

I am now writing Chapter 9 of the biography. I am hoping to send the first five chapters to you fairly soon, and at the same time I will send them to Claud Handford. You will see that both you and he have been of great help to me.

I wrote to the Rev. A. J. Morcom on November 10th. last year, but I did not receive any reply from him. However he must have spoken to at least one of the five men whose names you gave me. This was Dr. A. L. Peck, and probably I shall have to be satisfied with that.

There is one difficulty that I cannot resolve. I wrote to Dr. Peck about it and he cannot resolve it either. I am enclosing a copy of the letter which I sent to him. Do you think you can solve the problem?

I hope you keep in good health, because I am hoping to visit you later in the year to thank you for all the help you have given me. Probably in July or August. Meanwhile I hope that when you have read the Chesterfield chapter you will advise me whether I need do any further work on it, whether for example I should write to Miss Heather Barclay, who was alive when you wrote to me in 1967.

Yours sincerely,

Alan Paton
