Dear John,

If I sent the biography to you about the middle of December, do you think you would be able to find time to read as much of it as I have written (some thirty-nine chapters) between then and round about Christmas? Dorrie and I have been invited to a wedding in Johannesburg on December 22, and the family are anxious that we stay on for Christmas, but this we would only do if I could take the opportunity of discussing the biography with you after you had read it. If we go, we would be leaving here on December 21 and returning on December 27, so that would give us two or three days for discussion, excluding Christmas and Boxing days.

I would be glad if you could let me know soon about this, as our plans hinge on whether or not you are able to read the biography before December 22 and will be available for discussion before December 27. In other words, if this is not possible, we shall not go to Johannesburg at that time.

Kindest regards to Peggy and yourself from us both.

Yours as ever,
