

Hello Phyllis

One day we might write a proper letter, by which time you will probably have forgotten who we are. Fio was going to write a note last night but is getting somewhat distracted at the moment (possible changes in family circumstances - this is not yet official OK).

We do nothing very exciting, eat, sleep and work. That probably sounds like an unlooked for luxury for you. We hear that things are very tense and presumably still very dangerous. We are also starting to hear about the horrors in the homelands. How can South Africa boast of its development policies when it lets thousands starve to death? I suppose that sounds deaf to you in Lesotho but apologists for the regime in England still bluff on about the amazing standards of living of all peoples under Bhotan benign ~~regime~~ government.

Enough of this - we do worry about you a lot and wish you were somewhere ~~less~~ less dangerous. What about another holiday?

If you are really unlucky we might reappear in Lesotho to carry out some capitalist enterprise or other.

Miss you and the people of Afrika
Love

Dave
