

Apartheid regime in South Africa continues arbitrary arrests and illegal jailings of freedom fighters

"Freedom Struggle in South Africa"

HEAR

I. B. TABATA

President of the Unity Movement of South Africa

I. B. Tabata, the President of the Unity Movement of South Africa, has devoted a lifetime to the struggle for liberation.

In 1961, in face of mounting political tensions, with the government applying both bribery and force to spread confusion among non-white leaders of various groups, the leadership of the Unity Movement established a national political organization, APDUSA, The African People's Democratic Union of Southern Africa, and made Tabata its president.

A mixture of audacity and luck enabled him to escape continual police pursuit. But by May, 1963, he was advised that he should make his escape, since under the 90-Day Detention Act arrest was imminent. The police-van sat outside his door, but he escaped through Natal to Swaziland, a British Protectorate inside South Africa.

Today, Tabata has found refuge in Lusaka, Zambia.
